GARDENING TIPS & TRICKS

Help Seedlings Grow

Seedlings are vulnerable to damage that could destroy them before they get the chance to grow. Cut soda bottles in half and place them over your seedlings until they become too big to fit underneath. Always remove the soda cap before placing over the plants to avoid suffocation.

Crop Rotation For Disease Prevention

Vegetables are susceptible to different diseases. Many of these disease-causing organisms stay underground during the winter, multiplying, and then attack your newly planted crop. To avoid this, rotate your planting position each year. If you planted cucumbers in the first row on the right last time, plant them on the first row on the left this year.

Natural Pest Repellent

Bugs can destroy the healthiest plants in your garden. If you are against pesticide sprays, there are many natural spray repellents you can make with ingredients most people have in their kitchen cabinets. A 2-to-1 ratio of garlic and water, sprayed liberally on and around your plants, will keep most pests away. Be sure to apply frequently and reapply after prolonged periods of rain.

Damage From Animals

Deer wreak the most havoc. While dogs can help keep them away, it's not enough to save your garden. The next time you get your hair cut, use the clippings and spread them across your garden. The human scent acts as a natural deterrent to drive the deer away.

Birds also cause their fair share of damage, especially to squash and pumpkins. To prevent them from picking and destroying your plants, slide your vine plants into a pair of old panty hose. The birds cannot penetrate through and will search elsewhere for their food.

Fertilizing & Nutrients

Before planting your seeds, place one raw egg into the soil where you plan to put your seedling. The raw egg will coat the seed, creating a protective barrier and acting as a natural fertilizer. You can also cut up banana peels and spread them around your garden.

Banana peels contain vital nutrients your plants need to thrive like potassium, sodium, sulfur, magnesium, and phosphate. As the peels decompose, the nutrients get absorbed into the soil and travel up the roots to the plant.
