Be A Grill Master

Grilling Tips

- If you don't have a grill brush you can just crumple up aluminum foil and use like a brush.
- To avoid the lump in your burger, push down in the center with your thumb or a spoon.
- When grilling chicken, boneless meat needs direct heat. Bone-in pieces need lower indirect heat, direct heat will burn them.
- To sear steaks pat them dry on both sides after marinating.
- To get the richest flavor in your meat, don't flip often, one time flipping is enough.

Why Gas/Propane?

- Easy to start
- Quick heat up 10-15 minutes
- Easy temperature adjustment
- Easy to clean

Why a Pellet Grill?

- Effortless Ignition
- Even Heat Convection Cooking
- Wireless Connectivity
- Amazing Smoke Flavor
- Easy to Use
- Fewer Flare-Ups

Why Charcoal?

- Gets hotter than gas grills
- A smokey flavor
- You get to play with fire
- More affordable cost of grill
- Avoid problem of running out of propane halfway through cooking dinner!

Perfect Steak Marinade

- 1/2 Cup Soy Sauce
- 1 tsp Garlic Powder
- 2 Tbsp Worcestershire Sauce

- 3 Tbsp Crushed Garlic
- 1/2 tsp Onion Powder

Mix ingredients. Marinate for 30 minutes before grilling.

Mental Health Benefits Of Being In Nature:

Improved Attention • Lower Stress • Better Mood • Increases In Empathy
Reduced Risk Of Psychiatric Disorders • Increases In Cooperation

Research has shown that spending time in nature can act as a soothing balm for our brains. University of Chicago psychologist Marc Berman PhD, and his student Kathryn Schertz, explored in 2019 that green spaces near schools promote cognitive development in children and green areas near children's homes promote self control behaviors. Experiments have found that being surrounded by natural environments improves memory, cognitive flexibility and attention control, while being surrounded by urban environments has links to attention deficits. Just a few moments of being in nature and the outdoors can wake up your tired brain.

So now, step away from your computer screen and your favorite television program, and go outside to explore the hills and prairies that we are all fortunate to call home. Your mood will improve, and your work will improve. There are so many parks and trail systems near you that are waiting to be explored!

CONTAINER GARDENING IN SMALL SPACES

Having a limited amount of space doesn't have to put a damper on your love of gardening. With some simple containers that are found around the house, you can grow lots of space-saving plants. Read on for ideas to help you get started planting your container garden

BAKING PANS

Cake pans and muffin tins that are made of metal start to look pretty worn after a while. Instead of pitching them in the trash, use them for starting seedlings. They are shallow and wide enough that each pan can fit quite a few little seedlings comfortably. Be sure to plant them in rows, just as you would in the ground. That way thinning is a little easier.

COFFEE CANS

Leftover plastic or tin coffee cans work best for medium-sized plants that need drainage, since poking holes at the bottom of them is easy. Miniature rose bushes that can be pruned back in the fall look lovely in them. So do rosemary plants and lavender. Several types of bonsai trees will also do fine because they usually have their roots pruned back along with their foliage.

BUCKETS

For larger plants, big buckets work perfectly. They offer more room for an extended root system, so tomatoes and other types of vegetables will still thrive even though they aren't in the ground. Choose buckets that are wide enough for a tomato cage to fit in them comfortably. Tomato cages are essential to growing gardens in small spaces because they help direct growth vertically, instead of it spreading out on the patio or balcony.

TEA CUPS

Small tea cups and coffee cups with a chip or a cracked handle can be recycled into little planters. Since drilling into glass is difficult without it shattering, there won't be a way to add draining. Small herbs that don't mind saturated soil will solve this problem. Some of the best herbs to grow in tea cups are mint and chamomile. These containers can be used to start seedlings.
